Think you don't need a will or living will?

If you're like most people, you don't like thinking about planning for your death. However, there are many good reasons why it's important to have a will no matter what your personal circumstances might be. For example, have a say in your health care treatment if you're not able to speak for yourself, assign guardianship for minor children, and organize your assets.

Why should you and your spouse plan your last wishes and funeral arrangements in advance?

One of the most confusing and conflicting times for many of us is the period surrounding the death of a family member. There are many tasks and decisions to make – all when emotions and stress are high, and time and energy may be low. Advance planning helps relieve these uncertainties for family members left behind and ensures your last wishes are known.
